With La gazza ladra Rossini succeeds in achieving a transformation not only in terms of the mixture of comic-sentimental and dramatic elements but also of a musical style which is enriched, modulated to suit events and which seems to forerun that aesthetic ideal that was to be formalised some years later: "the composer must artfully adapt the character of the music to the dramatic subject and find a wholly new rhythm, if he can, of new effect, if he can, but such that it can express the mood of the drama and, one by one, the most significant situations, characters and passions".
